WHAT ARE THE FORGE WORLD MODELS MADE OF AND HOW DO I WORK WITH IT?

Unless otherwise noted, all Forge World models are made of resin. Resin is a word used to describe a wide range of castable synthetic plastic type materials. The resins we use are ideally suited for making highly detailed complex models. From a modeller's or hobbyist's point of view, working with resin models is similar to working with plastic or metal models. Each part is hand cast using the most advanced techniques and best quality resin to produce models with extremely fine detail.

Due to the nature of the casting processes some pieces may contain slight air bubbles. This is perfectly normal and unavoidable. These can easily be filled with model filler or super glue.

Sometimes resin parts can become warped but they can be quite easily corrected by placing the parts in hot water for up to a minute, then carefully bending them back to the desired shape. Thicker pieces will require more time in the hot water than thinner parts.

Any waste resin or mould lines should be carefully removed from all parts and sanded smooth before assembly. The larger pieces of waste resin may need to be removed with a modelling knife, clippers or small modelling saw as appropriate.

Some resin models may require washing to remove mould release fluid before painting can begin. If your models appear to be slightly greasy then wash them in warm soapy water to remove this fluid from the surface of your models. Use something like an old toothbrush to clean in the fine detail areas where appropriate.

To glue resin parts together, or to bond plastic components to resin parts, use Citadel Super Glue.
